

We believe something effectual is now doing for the removal of the Gold Diggers from the Cherokee territory. Maj. Weger has arrived and a considerable reinforcement has been added to the United States' troops which are stationed there. The policy pursued is, to destroy the provisions, camp equipage, working utensils, or whatever else is found belonging to the diggers; while they themselves are conveyed to the nearest ferry, and put across the river free of charge. A gentleman who travelled that road a few days ago, informs us that he met at least one hundred on the road in one day who had been thus expelled from the territory, or taken the hint from this gentle specific administered to others.