

U In looking over the debates in the French Chamber of Deputies, (brought by the late arrival at New York) on the American Indemnity bill, we discover that the speech of A. S. Clayton, in Congress on the French question, was brought up by M. Beryer, who spoke in opposition to the bill, as an auxiliary to aid him in his efforts to defeat its passage. The speech of an American statesman appealed to by the enemies of American rights in a foreign deliberative assembly, for the purpose of plastering over their insults and their wrongs! "Tell it not in Gath!"

This fact furnishes the strongest exemplification we recollect of having seen, of the wretched effects of that kind of party infatuation and madness, which sometimes prompt men to oppose blindly and indiscriminately, all the measures of an administration to which they are opposed.
