

UNITED STATES' BANK.

By referring to an article in another column, the reader will discover that the Branch of this Institution at Savannah has ceased to redeem its bills. This was done without giving any previous intimation of such an intention, and for that reason, if no other, is a most unwarrantable and high handed measure. From the note of Cashier, we infer that the same course has been adopted at all the other Branches throughout the Union, and the consequent disappointment and inconvenience every where will be seriously annoying. The holders of bills will be compelled to sell them at a discount, or incur a loss of time, expense and risk, in sending them to the mother Bank at Philadelphia, perhaps there to depend upon Mr. Biddle's pleasure as to the time and manner of their redemption.

This is the corrupt and corrupting Institution which a combination of Whigs, Anti-Masons and Abolitionists in the Legislature of Pennsylvania, has lately succeeded in rechartering, for which their nullifying friends at the South have raised a shout of gladness and congratulation—this is the institution which the sub-editor of the Whig thinks should have continued to hold the government deposits, to assist it in purchasing other friends, or by its increased control of the money market, to create a factitious prosperity in the commercial community, only, as its interest or revenge might dictate, to plunge it in deep distress and perhaps irretrievable ruin—and now it will not redeem its bills where they are payable! This outrage upon the public confidence should and we trust will be requited, by a general determination on the part of the people not to countenance or permit the circulation of these bills any longer. They have already become the channel through which abolition denunciations of the South are sent among us, and we think it high time to put a stop to the encouragement either of such efforts or such Banks.

It will be seen by an advertisement in our columns, that the Treasurer of Georgia has given notice that no bills of the Bank of the United States or its Branches will hereafter be received at his office. Such a step was very necessary and proper—indeed, under the circumstances, it became an imperious duty.
