

JUDGE CLAYTON.

We devote much of our space this week, to the publication of the vindication of Judge CLAYTON, by his son, P. CLAYTON, Esq. We personally know nothing of the subject-matter of this controversy; but it is due to the memory of the distinguished statesman and jurist, who lived and labored and died in this town, that, if his acts have been misrepresented, or the purity of his motives brought in question—however high the authority—that the vindication of them should appear before the public.—Most of our readers are doubtless familiar with many of the facts contained in Mr. C.'s vindication and therefore prepared to do justice to all—the living and the dead.
