

In our last number, we mentioned that Georgia contained only four Jackson presses, alluding to the Chronicle, Telegraph, Jacksonian, and Statesman & Patriot. In ordinary times, the error would be hardly worth correcting, but now, when one Crawford paper has openly gone over to the enemy, and the Augusta Constitutionalist not only approves the protests and recommends disunion in the democratic ranks, but also expresses its satisfaction at the exclusion from our National Hall of a memorial of the brightest victory in our annals, and its "uneasiness" at "Jackson's success"—it becomes imperious justice to distinguish between faith and hypocrisy, and draw the line of demarcation between the friends of Jackson on the one side, and his enemies overt or disguised on the other. The Washington News terms the fifth Jackson paper in Georgia; and, however we may differ from Mr. Charlton, the editor, on a few points, we cannot but hail him as a useful and honest ally in behalf of the people, and an honorable instance of manly independence, at a time when the ultra Crawfordites are urging the people to apostasy and bad faith. On inserting, in the News of the 24th ult. the protests of Messrs Clayton, Davies & Co. Mr. Charlton animadverts thus:

"The reason adduced by those gentlemen for their opposition to the pledge, we consider weak and frivolous. They well know, that the act of a precedent Legislature, cannot govern the conduct of a subsequent one, in regard to nominations. The object which the friends of Gen. Jackson had in view, in pledging the vote of the State to him, was to strengthen the stability and character of his popularity, in this quarter. The effects of the protests, if they are capable of producing any, would inevitably tend to weaken that popularity and excite the hopes of the coalition. They already hail them as the evidences of an opposition to General Jackson: but, with the great mass of the people, they do not weigh a feather in the scale."
