

A GREEABLE to the determination of the Board at the last quarter, the Trustees attended, and the examination commenced in the usual order.

The students went through their exercises with promptitude and exactness, and demonstrated that an improvement had taken place to the credit of the teachers and the students. The Board then adjourned until the evening.

The large room of the Academy being converted into the form of a theatre, the scholars were convened in the evening to perform their exercises in rhetoric, and acquitted themselves with real applause, affording credit to the professors in this branch.

In the course of the whole exercises the Trustees feel themselves pleased generally with the students; but having engaged some premiums to the more distinguished merit, they determined that Edmond Bacon, of the first class, excelled on the grounds of general learning; and that he be presented with a gold medal of the value of one Eagle, with a device indicative of the occasion.—That

George Clayton, of the second class, so far excelled as to be entitled to particular attention; and that for the same he be presented with a volume of Morse's Geography.—

That Thomas Camber Walton, of the third class, excelled in their exercises; and for which he be presented with a volume of the American Selection. And that, of the young Misses of the Academy, Sally Parish excelled in their exercises; and that she be presented for the same with a volume of Thomson's Seasons.

Resolved, That a gold medal, of the value of one Eagle, be adjudged and presented annually to the person of the first class who shall excel in the Academy; and premiums, of the value of the books now adjudged to the second and third classes, to those who shall excel in them; but the medal shall not be adjudged a second time to the same person, nor the premiums to the same persons a second time while in the same classes; and in like manner of the young Misses of the Academy.

Resolved, That this Academy be again opened under the same tuition and profession on the first Monday in November next, and that day be considered as the future Anniversary of the same.

Resolved, That the following vacations take place in future: At the end of the first quarter one week; at the end of the second quarter one week; at the end of the third quarter two weeks; at the end of the fourth quarter two weeks; and at Christmas two weeks.
