

Diary Entry for March 15, 1835, Salem, North Carolina, George H. Rodgers Travel Diary, University of Virginia Library, Special Collections, Charlottesville, Virginia

March 15th

1835

During my stay at the above [mentioned?] place, I went to Salem a neat little ville about sixteen miles from the place¹ I boarded. This place is settled by Dutch, which a person could easily discover at first sight from its appearance. Judge Clayton of Georgia put up at the house where I boarded and staid all night together with his family and a gentleman from [Union?] South Carolina, a member of the House of Representatives. They were on their return from the City of Washington. ...

¹ Rodgers had been at Greensboro, N.C. previously.
